Learning: Our strategic plan centres around what we need to learn at various stages of our work, and we encourage staff learning and development in two specific ways:

1. All of our programmes undertake developmental evaluation, whereby we seek to learn from current work in order to improve future work.
2. We operate an ongoing 'learning club' which operates as a project that staff can rotate into for a specific time period, allowing them dedicated time to learn about a topic of interest and value for Ākina. We encourage reflective journaling through this process and an informal presentation of learning at regular whole-team retreats.

Bold action: This represents a fearlessness in our approach, confidently exploring the unknown in pursuit of better. We will make mistakes – we're human! We foster an environment where it is ok if you fail sometimes. The important thing is to learn from it, and quickly move on in a better direction.
